Senate's Tariff Changes

The finance committee of the senate has made a pretty thorough examination and detailed analysis of the house bill for the revision of the tariff, making changes, as was expected. On most things the senate has cut even deeper than the house. It has made many additions to the free list, and has kept in mind throughout, the president's desire, so far as that desire is conformable with consistency and what the democratic senators hold to be democratic principles, to reduce the customs duties.

Wool is to be put at once on the free list. This President Wilson demands, without any delay and without the least equivocation. He will have no protection for wool, and it is curious to see democrats in the wool states who will have to face their constituents for obeying the president's behest in this matter to the damage of the local interests of their states, and the loss of their prestige with their party, and to the peril of that party.

President Wilson's sugar program is also to be adhered to strictly, and sugar is to be put upon the free list at the end of three years. Here again democratic senators are put in the same antagonistic relations to their constituents at the behest of the president, as democratic senators from the wool states are. The democratic senators from Colorado are naturally just as friendly to the sugar interests as the democratic senators from Montana are to the wool interests; and yet, the democratic senators in these states sacrifice their home interests and the desires of their constituents to the will of the president.

In the metal schedule, the democratic senators have relieved the situation somewhat by extending the free list on iron and steel, and reducing what duties were placed on the manufactures of these metals. But since it has been abundantly shown that iron and steel need no protection in this country, save perhaps, as Mr. Carnegie suggests, on the making of needles, the free list extensions are defensible. The iron and steel industry in this country is the greatest in the world. It is no infant, but a giant, overshadowing the production of Great Britain and Germany, combined. It goes into all parts of the world, taking from all competitors the most difficult jobs and the most profitable competitive enterprises.

On the other hand, the democratic senators have materially increased the tariff on lead-bearing ores and on zinc. This is entirely proper. The increase in lead is from the house rate of one-half cent per pound on lead contained in ores, to three-quarters of a cent as agreed to by the senate committee. On zinc ores the house rates of 10 per cent is increased to 12½ per cent; on zinc blocks the house rate of 10 per cent is raised to 15 per cent.

Otherwise, the action of the senate's finance committee has been almost uniformly downward, but since the democrats are in control in both houses, and have the administration, it is well to let us have a straight democratic tariff bill, and see what will come of it. If the people are not then content, they can easily unite and next year correct anything that is harmful in this tariff bill. And, since the protection sentiment in this country is overwhelming, that sentiment can, three years hence, elect an administration that will be as pronouncedly for protection as the present one is for low tariff.

Just how Nevada will profit from the tariff legislation is something unknown. Senator Pittman of Nevada declares that 90 per cent of the people of this state favor free wool and free sugar, notwithstanding the fact that practically every democratic newspaper in Nevada has declared in favor of the present tariff with regard to the wool and sugar items. Pittman appears to be paying more attention to securing a government railroad for Alaska than for legislation that would benefit this state.

"Alaska is in need of a railroad that its resources might be developed," he has declared. It is presumed that Nevada is also in need of protection that the great resources of this state might likewise be developed. It might not be out of the way to remind Senator Pittman that he was elected in Nevada and not in Alaska.

Striking Stocks From the List

Goldfield Consolidated, a prominent mining stock, has been stricken from the trading list of the New York Stock Exchange. In this case the company's directors "rode for a fall." They broke the rule of the exchange regarding transfers and registration of stock because they wished to put the shares back on the curb. The exchange could not do this at their request, so they forced its hand by a technicality. It was really a divorce by consent and it affords a chance to discuss listing and striking from the list without taking sides in a real dispute.

The stock exchange admits securities to its list after a careful examination of their status and by virtue of agreement that the companies will make full reports of earnings, etc., at stated intervals and will register transfers in a manner that past experience has proved will check manipulation and over-issues. All this done for the protection of the public and the stock exchange in its turn provides an open market in which quoted prices represent actual market values.

COMPLEXION PROTECTION A SUMMER NECESSITY

Complexions are chiefly injured by extremes of temperature—cold and heat. In summer time the skin dries and hardens and unless the normal condition of the surface is restored, permanent injury is apt to result.

OUR ROSE CREAM

(By Associated Press.)

SAN FRANCISCO, June 24.—The state railroad commission reduced today passenger rates from ten to twenty cents from points in Contra Costa, Yolo, Solano and Sacramento counties to Oakland, to take effect when the tariffs are issued in August. The ruling provides for a similar reduction in October to upper Sacramento and San Joaquin valley points.
